Excerpt: ... to that of deputy; and several other reductions are effected. There was an understanding, as already hinted, that Elliots administration was to open with an attempt to reside at Canton, and communicate directly with the native authorities. In Lord Palmerstons letter of 12th June 1837, this last condition is made imperative, as well as the omission in the address of the term pin or petition. The new superintendent appears to have applied himself to this task with great discretion, and without too implicit an adherence to his instructions. His own appointment offering a favourable opportunity, he wrote an address, admitting however the obnoxious term pin, announcing his commission, and hinting that the number of ships and seafaring men in the river caused a danger of disturbance, to which he knew the governors were keenly sensible. He solicited, therefore, a passport permitting him to repair to Canton, and he added highly respectful, and in some degree flattering, expressions. Four British merchants, at his request, delivered it to Hou-qua, the principal Hong, and solicited its transmission. In two days the governor, through the Hongs, vouchsafed a reply, referring indeed to the order for appointing only a supercargo, yet observing that the phraseology and subject-matter of the said foreigners address are reverential and submissive; that he seems to understand matters; and may therefore be expected to be implicitly obedient. The merchants are therefore instructed to make strict inquiry, and report whether his statements appear correct; in which case a memorial would be forwarded to the great emperor. In the mean time he must remain at Macao, and the utmost he could expect would be to reside alternately there and at Canton, coming and going at the regul...
