

General View of the Political State of France and of the Government of Louis XVIII (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from General View of the Political State of France and of the Government of Louis XVIII These letters were written for the information of a friend. The author has since been prevailed to publish, and, for that purpose he has made some additions to them. In composing them, he has been actuated solely by the love of truth and justice, and no other motives engage him to make them public. He has no personal enmity to any political character in France, and expects nothing from any man or party. As to the style of these letters, it will show the hurry with which they had been written; but the author hopes it will be found in general clear. Writing from memory alone, without any aid from books or persons, he may have committed some inaccuracies in stating facts relative to the ancient government, but he is certain he cannot be accused of error in any statement of importance.
