The disputed causes of this dangerous war, which broke out in 1499, it is of little moment to notice. Partly at the instigation of Ludovico Sforza, partly with the restless spirit of conquest which distinguished the Ottoman empire in that age, the sultan Bajazet II. turned his whole power by land and sea against the Venetian possessions in Istria, Dalmatia, and the continent and islands of Greece. The republic was not equal to the successful maintenance of the contest against his gigantic strength; and though the pope, the kings of Spain, France, and Portugal, and the knights of Jerusalem from their stronghold of Rhodes, successively joined their squadrons to her naval armaments against the infidels, these occasional and partial succours failed in giving a favorable turn to the war. Without any decisive event, the republic, in 1503, by the sacrifice of St. Maura and some possessions in the Morea, rejoiced to conclude a peace with the Porte, which was destined to last above thirty years. The conduct pursued by the Venetians in Italy The CHAP, from Ferdinand II., gave the king of Spain, as I-the present possessor of southern Italy, an object v-v-/ to gain by uniting with their other enemies, several of the minor Italian princes had ancient grievances to revenge upon them..-of n after this pacification, ripened the general animo-enemie,Pro. sity and envy against them, of which the seeds hercontihad long been sown by their successful career of grandize meat. continental aggrandizement.
